HE DIDN'T CARE

Whistler Was Not Worried About the Fit of the Hat the Other Fellow Sold.

One day the late James McNeil Whistler, the famous artist, was in London hat shop. He was bare headed, as the clerk had taken his hat to another part of the shop to

As Whistler stood there, leaning idly against the counter, a man rush ed up to him, took off his hat, thrus in anger: "Look here, I want you to understand that I know something cout hats, and I tosist this but loesn't fit me."

Whistler looked at the man with nterest, then he smiled politily, Please put the hat on," he said, and the angry man did so. Whatler looked him over critically from head to foot, then in his peculiar, drawling
